It has been helpful to read of the innovation being shown by many corps in distributing the weekly Army papers - Salvationist, Kids Alive!, War Cry - at a time when programs are ceasing, public movement is being restricted and heralds are being advised not to take to the streets and pubs. Salvationist continues to be a prime means for keeping the territory updated; Kids Alive! is proving to be a great resource for keeping our children connected, and War Cry has been a welcome addition to many food parcels and as an encouragement slipped into people's letter boxes.

We are, however, aware that many corps are finding it hard to distribute the papers and so it has been agreed that they will be available digitally as well as in hard copy until we are permitted to hold Sunday meetings. If you wish to keep receiving your usual order of papers, you need to do nothing and they will arrive each week. You may even want to give some thought to increasing your orders of War Cry and Kids Alive! if you can use them for pastoral or outreach purposes. Some corps have had soldiers 'adopt a street' and distribute papers to their neighbours to help them feel connected.

If you wish to view - and promote to your corps and staff - the magazines digitally, they will be freely available each week on the territorial website. If you require a pdf version (to email out or to print out), simply email the publication's dropbox listed at the front of each paper, and the staff will arrange for a pdf file to be emailed to you.

All orders changed in response to the pandemic will automatically revert to pre-shutdown quantities as soon as restrictions are lifted.
