THE OFFICER.

“Go straight for Souls, and go for the worst.”—THE GENERAL.

No. 10.]

OCTOBER, 1899.

[Vol. 7.

THE OFFICER'S REALISATION OF THE TRUTH HE PROCLAIMS.

BY THE GENERAL.

The Officer must realise in his own experience, and exhibit in his own life, the truths and principles he proclaims to other people. If he does not, he will soon tire of his work, and either give it up, or settle down to a kind of “horse at a mill” discharge of the business, through a monotonous round of duty which produces little or no effect either on his own heart or on the hearts of anyone else. Saving souls, and keeping them up to the regulation level of faith and duty when they are saved, is no easy task, even when a man goes into it with all his soul, and is not satisfied without succeeding; nay, I question whether any occupation can be found on the whole earth that makes greater and more continuous demands on the powers of a man's body and soul. No one is likely to keep on at the anxious toil with fervour and faith who does not in his own heart feel the reality of the truths he proclaims, and the joy of being the medium of conveying Salvation to others.

The secret of the majority of the retirements from this battlefield is to be found here. The spirit of the work first passes out of men's hearts, and that gone, the discharge of the duty, no matter with what success it may be attended, becomes uninteresting and irksome, and resignation and backsliding are the natural results.

If you do not experience in your heart, and practise in your daily life, what you preach, no one will take any notice of what you say; and you might, therefore, as well save yourself the trouble of going through the duty. Your people will naturally reckon that if you cannot rectify yourself, you won't be able to rectify them.

DO YOU KNOW?

If you do not realise—that is, if you do not feel—in your own soul the reality of the things which you proclaim, how can you speak with the necessary confidence yourself? Have you ever noticed what a great deal
