

the room, threw the papers into a vase of vinegar so that they might not convey the disease to another, and retired to a convenient place where he died in twelve hours.

A TIMELY RESCUE. † † † †
 "And let us not be weary in well doing."
 —Gal. vi. 9.

During a heavy storm off the coast of Spain, a dismantled merchantman was observed by a British frigate to be drifting before the gale. Every eye and glass were on her, and a canvas shelter on deck, almost level with the sea, suggested the idea that there might be life on board.

The order was given to put the ship about, and presently a boat was lowered and started to bear down upon the wreck. When it was reached a strange object rolled from beneath that canvas screen against the broken mast. When hauled into the boat, it proved to be the body of a man, head and knees bent together, but so dried and shrivelled as to be hardly felt within the ample clothes, and so light that a mere boy lifted it on board.

Returning to the frigate the men laid the body on the deck, and the crew gathered around with feelings of horror and pity. But suddenly the man showed signs of life; he moved; then muttered; he was alive.

My comrades, never despair of saving a soul, for even at the eleventh hour you may be the means of his salvation.

A BRAVE MINER. † † † †
 "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit."—Psalm xl. 2.

The following beautiful story is told of the courage and Christlike act of a miner in the North of England. The men in the mine were at work as usual, when they were all alarmed by the unmistakable signs and sounds of an explosion in the mine. At once they shouted one to another, "Escape for the shaft, lads! The mine's on fire!" The mine was fast filling with smoke and flame, while some of the men had already been killed, and others injured too badly to escape. One little collier lad, mistaking his way, was running to certain death. "Stop," cried a brave fellow called Collier Jack, "that's the wrong way," and taking him by the arms—which were so badly burned that the flesh gave way beneath his grasp—he landed him on his shoulder and carried him with all the haste possible to the mouth of the pit in safety.

In the horrible pit of sin, and going straight to eternal death, are multitudes all around us. But Christ stands beckoning—Himself the way of life.

GRATITUDE. † † † † †
 "Other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours."—John iv. 38.

A poor man, well up in years, busied in planting an apple-tree, was rudely interrupted by the evil spirit. "Why do you plant trees who cannot hope to eat of the fruit of them?" The man raised himself up and leaning upon his spade replied, "Someone planted trees before I was born, and I have eaten the fruit. I now plant for others, that the memorial of my gratitude may exist when I am dead and gone."

"THERE MUST BE RESURRECTION." † † † † †
 "O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. xv. 55.

We find that all human institutions, and all Divine ones, are only for a time, enduring until the germ of the institution or constitution reaches the largest possible development, and then Decay's effacing finger begins its work. No sooner does the fruit come to its full richness, no sooner has the sun put his last finger-touch upon the peach, than decay begins, and that vesture, so splendid, is found to contain a stone, and that stone is but a sepulchre which contains a seed; and yet from the seed shall come another splendour of outward vesture, which the stone of the sepulchre doth but veil for a moment. There must be resurrection. The stone must be rolled away; for the new life is better than the old. The seed must fall; for the new truth must be born.
